ABSTRACT. The English language is given more importance in the development of the Nation, and in particular Sri Lanka. But there is a negative relationship between the need of the Language and the supply. Because the education sectors, especially the school education does not have adequate number of staff to teach the language. Also it is visible that the teachers who are supposed to teach the Language do not have adequate exposure to the language and they are not given proper training prior to the entrance to the schools that they have been allocated. "The twenty year ethnic war is the reason for this particular problem," most of the responsible officials said. But how about the situation pertaining to this problem in the post-war situation?

English is a foreign language and is taught as second language in Sri Lanka at all levels from primary to the tertiary. This present study engages itself to check the situation pertaining to the English Language teaching in the post-war situation remains the same as that of the pre-war situation. Also this research encompasses how this English language teaching affects the economic development of the selected place and the Nation on the whole.

Key words: Nation, School Education, Exposure, Teacher, Staff.
